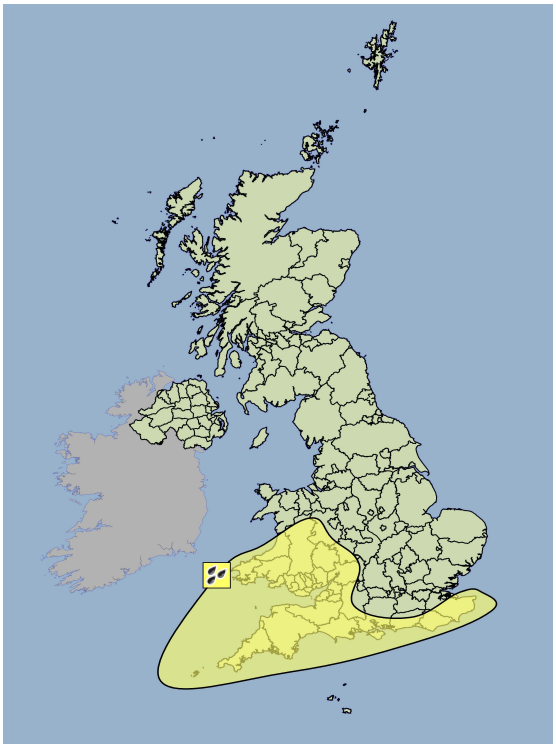
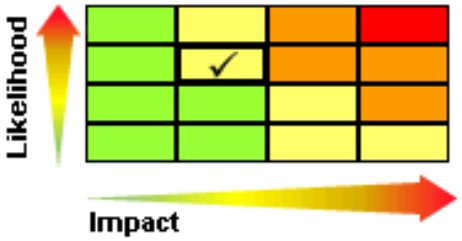
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Heavy showers and some bands of more persistent rain will continue to rotate around a major depression centre through Saturday and into Sunday. A further 10-15 mm of rainfall is likely quite widely, with locally over 20 mm for parts of South Wales and southwest England bordering the Bristol Channel. Falling on top of recent heavy rain, this is likely to exacerbate the flooding situation in some places.

Winds will also be a feature with severe gales affecting coasts.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 11:00 on Sat, 08th Feb 2014 until 12:00 on Sun, 09th Feb 2014

Frequent heavy and squally showers, with hail and thunder at times, will affect southern and western parts of England and Wales through this weekend. Some more persistent spells of rain are likely at times too, especially on Saturday night and early on Sunday.

The public should be aware that further disruption due to flooding is likely.

This is an update to the warning to remove parts of the Midlands, whilst also extend the risk period through to the middle of Sunday.
